ABOUT BOYS

In the Big Stores of New York-Applies to Wheeling Youths as Well. New York Sun: A man who has charge of the hiring of a lot of boys has no sinecure. The superintendents of the big stores all agree on this point. It is much harder to hire a boy than It is to hire a man."

That's the first thing the young man

That's the first thing the young man who hires all the youngsters for cash boys and for other places in one of the largest shops in city had to say when asked about the matter.

"Just wait a minute," he went on, "and let me tell you why. Now I'm more interested in boys than injunything or anybody else, and the experiences I've had with them would fill volumes. A man has a set look in his face, something that another man can understand, but a boy has not. His character, as a but a boy has not. His character, as a rule, is not sufficiently fixed to show itself. It is not wise to engage a boy on first sight, for when a boy applies for a place he is always at his very best. If is clothes aren't brushed then and his shoes polished and his nails clean he'll be clean afterward, you may be All men who hire the boys in department stores, however, do accept a partment stores, however, do accept a good many on sight.

"The first thing we do when a boy applies is to take stock of him. First, we look at his face, of course, and then at his general appearance, taking careful note of his manners. After that we consider his references, if he has any. The first thing we ask a boy is his age, for the law requires that he must be at least fourteen years old. If the applicant says he is under sixteen, we inquire if he has a certificate from the loard of health, which gives a general description of him. And if he says no, we stell him that we cannot consider his application until he gets this document, as the house employing a boy under age is liable to a fine."

"What general principle do you go on as the house employing a boy under age is liable to a fine."

"What general principle do you go on in hiring boys?" the reporter asked.

"Appearance goes a great yary in deciding whether a boy's application is accepted or not. If a boy is neat looking, has a keen, bright eye, is quick in his movements and polite, not having a reference will not stand in his way of getting a trial, if there are any places to be filled. The trouble with New York boys is that they don't stick; they don't get down to business and work with an eye to the future. They are a restless set, and are impatient for promotion, which comes as slowly at first in the career of a working child as it does in the career of a man. But when we get a boy who does knuckle down as if he wanted to own the store in the end, he goes right shead. Later I will give you some instances, but first I wish to say a word about references.

"When a boy who intends to go to work leaves sched the bound of the content of the content of the content of the work leaves sched the bound of the work leaves sched the content of the

when a boy who intends to go to work leaves school he should get a recommendation from his teacher. My experience has been that a teacher's reference has been that a teacher's reference is worth more than all other reference is worth more than all other reference is worth more than all other references put together. Teachers are honest und just, as a rule, in recommending a boy. I have in mind now one of the very best cash boys in the store, who came here with a letter from his teacher, who said, after giving him an excellent character, that, while not as bright as some others, when told to do a thing he always did it to the very best of his ability. She lowered that boy's standard in one way, but she raised it in another, and her honesty enabled me to place him in a situation that he was fitted to fill, and he is filling it admirably. When he is told to do a thing we think no more about it, for we know that boy will do his work well.

"The stereotyped recommendation which everyone gives is worth so much and no more, and as for a clergyman's recommendation. I wouldn't give tuppence for it. Boys have come here, hundreds of them, with letters from clergymen, and their very appearance gave evidence of the ministers' insincerity in recommending them. It is a cheap way to do a good turn to help some one along. It costs the clergyman nothing to write a letter, but he wouldn't waste his paper and ink if he knew how little the man who hires boys thinks of his meaningless. Words of praise. References from other houses are almost always no good. They frequently discharge a boy and send him away with a letter which says they know nothing against him. I never hire a boy with such a letter, and I always ask him why his former employer did not keep him. If a man goes to another house to investigate personally the reference of a boy, unless he is positively dishonest his former employer, nine times out of ten, will not tell what sort of a boy he is. This isn't as it should be. The standard of New York cash and office boys could be raised if the big stores that employ hundreds of them would stand by each other in furnishing honest recommendations."

"What is really wanted in a boy? Do you want a solemn, serious youngster or a lad full of life and pranks?"

"One of the solemn, serious kind seldom pan out well. There's something wrong about the average boy if the boy-ish spirit is absent. We don't expect boys to be saints, and so if they are somewhat mischlevous, that does not necessarily hurt their standing. Indeed, the very boys who are up to the most pranks are, as a rule, the quickest and most accurate about their work. A man in charge of a lot of boys has to study human nature carefully. These folks who say that all boys are alike, and hard nuts at that, are mistaken; they know nothing of boys. No two are alike, and others must be got rid of and as quickly as possible. What you might say to one boy without giving it a second thought offends another, takes A boy who will do a thing and lie about it is the very worst sort of a boy. These boys who own up to their mischievous, annoying jokes and tricks always come annoying jokes and tricks always com-out all right, but the liar never."

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy of trash of no account out profit to the vendor. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the only thing that has done any good whatever.
